

MADE IN GERMANY .brands { padding: 0 10px;text-align: center;} A: Whenever you have this kind of problem, take a look at your div width. I assume you have something like: Change that into this: The other issue could be a display:table-* property applied to an element that is not your parent div. That's why you keep on seeing the 1000px width. Q: Cannot find error in recursive function in haskell I have the following Haskell code: foo :: Int -> [Int] foo l = if l > 1 then [l-1] ++ foo (l-1) else [] Error message: Couldn't match expected type 'Int' with actual type '[a]' In the first argument of '(++)', namely 'l-1' In the first argument of 'foo', namely 'l-1' Why does this happen? A: The output of your function should be of type [Int] but you are giving it an Int. What you are getting, in effect, is [l-1], where l-1 is -1. You can just as well use a bound variable if this makes things clearer: foo :: Int -> [Int] foo 0 = [] foo l = l-1 : foo (l-1) You can also use a composition: foo :: Int -> [Int] foo = const [] You are here Informaci3n The American Library Association (ALA) and the International Federation of Library Associations (IFLA) have launched a new online resource, the IFLA ALA Digital Reading and Sharing Survey, to help librarians across the globe better understand their attitudes and practices when it comes to e-book usage. This online tool, based on the similar IFLA Digitization Project, is free to ALA members and non-members alike. You are here This project partners with the IFLA to develop a reference
